

Our individual sound is like an invisible fingerprint and I love working with the unique twists and turns, highs and lows of this human instrument. My 25 years of performance experience combined with 20 years of leading workshops internationally, and 8 years of university instructing inform my teaching style which is centered around awareness, active engagement and shared observation that guides the learning process. It is experiential, soul-focused, breath-centered, catered to each student, and supports mind and body connection, and a healthy, long-lasting voice. I have also shared my research on community singing and gospel music at conferences and with publications and peer-reviewed journals. I love the art of learning through playfulness, courageous exploration and finding joy wherever possible.
